GENESIS.

CHAPTER 1

In the beginning God initiated a great explosion. 2 Now the expanse of heaven was filled with energy and matter, yet all was formless and dark, the Spirit of God hovered over the whole expanse.

3 And God said, "Let there be order," and there was order.
4 God saw that the order was sufficient, and he separated the order from the disorder, destroying all that did not follow the order. 5 God called the order "laws," and placed the laws in the expanse, and over the expanse.
6 God made the laws to govern energy, matter, and all that resulted from the great explosion.

7 Although the heavens and the earth were far from completed, God finished his work and rested from all his work. 8 Then God blessed the laws and the expanse, and all that existed, because through them, all that is to emerge will emerge.

9 And so across the whole expanse of heaven, great clouds of matter pulled themselves into themselves bringing that which is not formed into what is formed.

10 All came into order because of the laws. The great clouds grew over the ages. 11 Formless became formed and darkness became light. 12 For the laws and the ages caused the great clouds to become givers of light. 13 The expanse of the heavens was filled with endless points of light. 14 As the great clouds increased in size and number; so then did their light increase.
15 Circles of matter stretched out around the lights; colliding and gathering, the laws and the ages caused the matter to form heavenly bodies. 16 Bodies of heaven formed around the lights, and through the ages it was so.

CHAPTER 2

Now the earth was formed within the circle of other heavenly bodies, each heavenly body was formed within a circle. 2 The laws and the ages formed the earth and the heavenly bodies, each into a circle. 3 All that was in the circles had light, the sun shone on all that was in the circles; the circle of earth had light. 4 The expanse of heaven and the surface of the earth were separated by a formation of waters. 5 There was a vault of
